Angle Count Sampling Bitterlich Sampling

30. October 2025

The angle count sampling is a forest inventory technique used to estimate the basal area of a stand. Using a relascope, the observer counts the number of trees that fall within a specific critical angle from a sampling point; this count is then used to calculate the basal area per hectare.