coppice with standards

30. October 2025

A combination of coppice and high forest, characterized by a widely spaced upper layer (mostly generatively established through planting or natural regeneration) and a regularly harvested lower layer (usually every ~20 years) maintained at a low height and regenerating predominantly vegetatively through stump sprouting.