light increment

30. October 2025

This thinning method results in a few strong trees evenly distributed across the area. In addition to promoting stronger growth of the remaining trees, it often helps meet high fuelwood demands. Crown thinnings are suitable for tree species that can respond to increased light availability at an older age through crown expansion and accelerated growth, e.g. beech.