site

30. October 2025

The forest site encompasses all abiotic factors significant for the growth of forest trees, such as terrain, climate, and soil. These factors are not influenced by competition among trees and remain relatively constant over time or are subject to regular variation (e.g. periodic flooding).