suited to site, site adapted

30. October 2025

A tree species is site adapted when it can develop on a site according to its ecological requirements, meaning that long-term, natural, or adapted use is possible without impairing the site.